The first part of the paper discusses the general theory of the firm, focusing on the role of capital structure and the trade-off between debt and equity. It examines how the firm's investment opportunities and growth prospects influence its financing decisions. The second part of the paper presents empirical evidence on the relationship between capital structure and firm performance, using data from a large sample of firms. The results show that firms with higher debt ratios tend to have lower performance, which is consistent with the trade-off theory. The paper also discusses the implications of these findings for policy and practice.
